Bay of Naples. The region immediately south of Lazio, Campania, marks the real beginning of the Italian south or mezzogiorno. It's the part of the south too, perhaps inevitably, that most people see, as it's easily accessible from Rome and home to some of the area's (indeed Italy's) most notable features – Roman sites, spectacular stretches of coast, tiny islands.

In a city infamous for belt-busting temptations, this piazza-side pasticceria (pastry shop) enjoys celebrity status. While you'll find all the local classics (including a particularly luscious babà), the star attraction is the ministeriale, a dark-chocolate medallion invented in the 19th century. The ingredients of its liqueur-laced ganache filling are a closely guarded secret.
