The Great Nation : France from Louis XV to Napoleon ...

The long reign of Louis XIV (1643-1715) was widely viewed as France's Grand Siècle ('great century'), yet by the king's death, the country had been reduced by European war and domestic circumstance to a wretched state: its economy was shattered, its society riven by religious and social discontent, its population reduced by demographic crisis, its cultural allure contested and found wanting, its political system in the doldrums. Yet the country was able to bounce back from ...

The Revolution's 'Other' consequently tended to be French rather than foreign. The French resumed their sense of civilized superiority over the rest of the world, but had now honed that sense of betterness within the political culture of the Revolution. The mission civilisatrice of the Great Nation, like charity, began at home.
